How does your vendor privileged access management strategy measure up?

Are you at an early, evolving, or elevated maturity stage? Answer 10 key questions and find out! Gain valuable perspective and actionable insights into third-party access best practices.

Strategy advancement

1. Have you moved past a risky VPN approach to managing vendor access?

Yes

No

2. Have you automated your organization's third-party access management processes?

Yes

No

3. Do you have a consistently applied strategy to secure third-party access?

Yes

No

Reality check: Managing vendor access via VPNs and manual processes — as well as an inconsistently applied privileged access strategy — create significant security risks.

Solution capabilities

4. Do you have a purpose-built third-party access management solution that leverages AI and machine learning to mitigate privileged access risk?

Yes

No

5. Do you use a third-party access solution featuring fine-grained access controls to ensure that access is time-bound and task-specific?

Yes

No

6. Do you have a solution enabling the security of credential vaulting and password rotation?

    Yes

    No

7. Do you use a solution that ensures crucial visibility by auditing and monitoring third-party access?

    Yes

    No

Reality check: The advanced features of an automated, purpose-built solution help mitigate risks stemming from third-party access.

Vendor management

8. Do you conduct detailed evaluations of your vendors' security and privacy practices?

    Yes

    No

9. Do you regularly maintain an inventory of all third-party vendors who have access to your network?

    Yes

    No

10. Do you leverage automated capabilities to manage vendor staff off-boarding and inactive accounts?

    Yes

    No

Reality check: Without a firm handle on vendors' security protocols, their compliance with agreed-upon standards, and their staff with access to your network, the ability to detect and remediate cyberattacks is greatly hampered.
